Lesson Learnt:

- Timeline with ministry approval should be proactive:
 - Understanding the ministry's approval timeline in advance is crucial to avoid delays. A proactive approach would include early engagement with the ministry, setting clear deadlines, and maintaining follow-ups to ensure approvals are secured in a timely manner. Future projects should incorporate a structured timeline for approvals to minimize disruptions.
- Student schedule overlapping with the program caused unexpected changes:
 - Many students had existing academic commitments that clashed with the program. A more thorough analysis of the academic calendar beforehand would help in scheduling the program during the most suitable period. Additionally, more flexible session structures, such as evening or weekend sessions, could be considered.
- Online tools are the best way to proceed faster:
 - Leveraging digital platforms significantly improved efficiency, communication, and execution. If this had been recognized earlier, many delays could have been avoided. Future projects should prioritize digital tools for registrations, meetings, feedback collection, and progress tracking to ensure seamless operations.
- More structured feedback loops should be integrated:
 - Continuous feedback from participants and stakeholders can help refine the program. Regular check-ins, surveys, and debriefing sessions should be systematically implemented to identify pain points and areas of improvement in real time.
- Allocating contingency plans and flexible budgeting:
 - Unforeseen circumstances, such as logistical challenges or last-minute cancellations, required quick adaptations. A well-structured contingency plan with allocated flexible funding can help address unexpected changes without compromising the program's objectives.

Recommendation

- This project should be an annual program: Given its positive impact on students and society, institutionalizing it as an annual event would provide continuity, allowing more students to benefit year after year. Long-term commitment would also facilitate improvements based on yearly evaluations.
- Expand the program into more provinces: Reaching students in remote areas is crucial to ensuring equal educational opportunities. Future initiatives should focus on expanding outreach, possibly incorporating hybrid models that blend online and offline participation for greater accessibility.
- Inclusion of students with disabilities: Ensuring that students with disabilities can participate would make the program more inclusive and equitable. This may require accessibility measures such as assistive technologies, alternative learning materials, and collaboration with disability support organizations.
- Host the event as a newly structured program with enhanced activities: A reimagined version of the event could include interactive workshops, group projects, mentorship opportunities, and closer involvement of Provincial Ambassadors. This would enrich the learning experience and create a more engaging environment for students.
- Introduce a mentorship component: Past participants should be encouraged to become mentors for new students, creating a self-sustaining ecosystem where knowledge and experience are passed down, fostering long-term benefits.
- Leverage digital platforms for engagement and accessibility: Digital solutions should be integrated for registration, learning modules, virtual discussions, and networking. This will ensure greater reach and flexibility for students in different locations.
- Encourage corporate sponsorships and scholarships: Seeking financial backing from corporations and donors would help sustain and grow the initiative. Incentives such as scholarships for outstanding participants can also increase motivation and participation.
